Grant Proposal

Description and Narrative

PROPOSAL TITLE:

Pacific Northwest Collaborative Tour & Recording Project

SUMMARY:
Please provide a short, 25-word description of your proposal.

A 15-day Pacific Northwest tour from Spokane, performing live, collaborating with regional artists, recording new music, and culminating in a Spokane showcase and album release."

PROPOSAL NARRATIVE:
Please describe the purpose of this request and how you will use SAGA funding. Please be specific in the description.

I am requesting SAGA funding to support a 15-day Pacific Northwest music tour and collaborative recording journey that begins and ends in Spokane. This project will cover travel expenses, venue fees, equipment, recording costs, lodging, and promotional efforts. The funding will allow me to connect with regional artists, perform for diverse audiences, record new collaborative music, and return to Spokane with a final showcase performance and album release event. The purpose of this request is to create a meaningful cultural exchange, highlight Spokane as a hub for creativity, and bring back new stories, recordings, and experiences that will directly enrich our local arts community. Every artist's journey is defined by both place and people. For me, Spokane has always been the foundation, my hometown, my anchor, and the creative soil in which my music has grown. Yet, as a musician, producer, and performer, I have also learned that growth comes from movement, from traveling outward, engaging with new audiences, and collaborating with fellow artists whose voices and experiences bring richness to the tapestry of music. This project, a 15-day Pacific Northwest tour and collaborative recording journey, is designed to do exactly that: to carry the spirit of Spokane outward, to connect with artists across the region, and then to bring their voices, influences, and stories back home through new recordings and a final showcase event.

With the support of SAGA funding, I will be able to take this vision from dream to reality, ensuring that Spokane is not just my starting point but also the central hub of an artistic circuit that highlights the creativity of our wider region. Over the course of 15 days, I will travel from Spokane through key cities in the Pacific Northwest, Portland, Seattle, Tacoma, Olympia, Boise, and smaller communities along the way, performing live shows, engaging with audiences, and collaborating with local musicians. At each stop, I will connect with artists in the community to co-write, record, and perform. These collaborations will be captured both in live performance and in studio sessions, building a collection of new material that will reflect the voices of the region. At the conclusion of the journey, I will return to Spokane with a set of recordings that will be mixed, mastered, and prepared for release as a collaborative album. To celebrate and share this work, I will host a final showcase performance in Spokane that features not only myself but also the regional collaborators I've worked with, either in person or through recorded contributions. This event will serve as both an album release party and a cultural gathering for our community, demonstrating the strength of collaboration and the role Spokane can play in nurturing regional creativity. I also plan on documenting the entire process on video.

The purpose of this request is to secure funding to make this ambitious project possible. Touring, traveling, recording, and promoting are resource-intensive endeavors, and while I have consistently invested my own time, money, and energy into my career, the scope of this project requires support. SAGA funding will ensure that the logistics, from transportation and lodging to venue fees and recording costs, do not limit the artistic potential of this tour. This funding is not simply about covering expenses; it is about creating access. By removing financial barriers, I will be able to dedicate my focus to the art itself: connecting with audiences, capturing the voices of collaborators, and curating a body of work that represents the Pacific Northwest as a whole. Ultimately, the purpose of this request is to strengthen Spokane's identity as a cultural hub by situating our city at the center of a larger regional creative exchange.

SAGA funding will be used specifically for: Travel Expenses: Gas, rental van costs, and mileage to transport myself, equipment, and team through the 15-day circuit. Lodging: Affordable overnight stays in each city to ensure rest and safety. Venue & Performance Costs: Venue rentals, booking fees, permits, and associated costs for hosting live shows in multiple cities. Recording & Production: Upgrades in equipment for mobile recording., engineer fees, and modest stipends for regional artists who collaborate, ensuring that their time and contributions are valued. Marketing & Promotion: Poster printing, digital ads, and video/photo documentation to share the journey both live and online. Final Showcase Event in Spokane: Venue rental, promotion, staging, and production for the culminating album release and community celebration. This breakdown ensures that every dollar of SAGA funding directly supports both the creation and sharing of new art. The heart of this project lies in collaboration and cultural exchange. Too often, artists work in isolation or are limited to the audiences of their hometowns. By traveling outward from Spokane, I am able to share my music with new communities, but more importantly, I am able to invite other artists into my creative world. These collaborations create something greater than the sum of their parts: songs that reflect multiple voices, perspectives, and styles. By recording these collaborations and bringing them back to Spokane, I will be offering our community something unique: an album and performance that not only showcase my own artistry but also amplify the talents of fellow regional musicians. This is not just about my story, it is about weaving Spokane's identity into the broader creative fabric of the Pacific Northwest. The impact extends beyond the performances themselves. By documenting the journey through photos, video, and recordings, I will create a lasting record that can be shared digitally with audiences far beyond the tour route. This means that Spokane's role in the project will be recognized not only regionally but also nationally and globally as the project gains visibility online.

The Spokane Arts Grant Awards are designed to enable a thriving arts economy and to support projects that enrich our community. This project aligns with those goals in several ways: Cultural Enrichment: By bringing diverse regional voices back to Spokane, the project enhances the cultural life of our community. Economic Impact: Funding will support venues, local artists, and production teams, contributing to Spokane's creative economy. Visibility for Spokane: Positioning Spokane as both the launch point and final destination of the tour highlights our city as a hub for creativity and collaboration. Sustainability: The final album and showcase event will have a lasting impact, continuing to generate engagement and opportunities long after the initial tour has concluded. In conclusion, at its core, this project is about connection: connecting Spokane to the wider Pacific Northwest, connecting artists to each other, and connecting audiences to new music and experiences. With SAGA funding, I will be able to create a tour and recording journey that not only advances my own career but also strengthens Spokane's position in the regional arts landscape. By investing in this project, SAGA will not only be supporting an individual artist but also fostering a model of collaboration and community exchange that enriches us all. I am deeply committed to carrying Spokane's creative spirit outward and returning with new stories, songs, and experiences that celebrate our collective artistry. This journey begins and ends here, in Spokane, but its echoes will resonate far beyond.

BACKGROUND:

How is your history as an artist, collective, or organization built upon, expanded, or redirected with the proposed work?

My history as an artist has always been shaped by both independence and collaboration. Growing up in Spokane and touring with my father's band at a young age instilled in me a deep respect for performance and the power of music to connect people. For most of my life I've carried that spirit forward, building a body of work that includes over two dozen albums, countless live performances, and a growing exploration of digital art and multimedia storytelling under the umbrella of Fly By Night Productions. My work has always centered on building bridges between genres, between artists, and between communities. This project builds directly on that foundation by expanding collaboration to a regional scale. Much of my past work has been focused within Spokane, where I've collaborated with local musicians, supported community events, and contributed to the city's cultural landscape. With this tour and recording journey, I am extending that collaborative spirit outward, intentionally seeking out artists across the Pacific Northwest to co-create new music and experiences. In doing so, I am both honoring the tradition of collaboration that has guided my work and redirecting it toward a larger canvas that encompasses multiple communities. The proposed work also reflects a natural progression in my artistic development. In recent years, I have increasingly focused on how music can serve as a platform for exchange, dialogue, and storytelling. Performing in different cities, recording new songs with local artists, and then returning to Spokane with an album and showcase event embodies this vision. It ensures that Spokane is not only the starting point but also the destination, a place where regional voices converge and where our community can experience the richness of the Pacific Northwest's cultural ecosystem. This project also aligns closely with my long-term goals as an artist. I aim to position Spokane as a hub of creativity, where local talent is recognized, celebrated, and connected to broader audiences. By traveling outward and returning with stories, collaborations, and recordings, I am helping to build that bridge. The final showcase and album release will not only highlight my own growth as an artist but also demonstrate how Spokane can serve as a gathering place for artistic innovation. In short, this project is both a continuation and an evolution. It builds on my lifelong history of creating and performing, expands my collaborative practice to new horizons, and redirects my focus toward positioning Spokane as a central player in regional arts conversations. With SAGA's support, I can take this next step in my journey, ensuring that the work I create not only reflects my own voice but also amplifies the diverse voices of the Pacific Northwest.

What other information should we know?

This project is not only about my personal growth as an artist, but about building connections that ripple outward into the community. By collaborating with a diverse range of musicians across the Pacific Northwest and bringing those voices back to Spokane, I aim to highlight our city as a cultural hub where regional talent converges. The final showcase will be accessible to the community, with affordable entry and digital livestreams to ensure broad participation. Documenting the journey through video, photos, and recorded music ensures that Spokane's role in this creative exchange will live on beyond the tour, inspiring future collaborations. For me, this project is also deeply personal. It continues the legacy of music I inherited from my father, honors the resilience I've built as an independent artist, and reflects my lifelong commitment to leave every stage, every collaboration, and every community better than I found it.

No. I am not interested in this opportunity at this time.

OPTIONAL: Events

Instruction

Are you applying for a grant to support one or more events?

Yes

Event Details

Is this a single event or multiple events?

Multiple

Name of event(s):

Pacific Northwest Collaborative Tour & Recording Project

Date of event(s):

Tentatively, from March 15th, 2026 until April 1st, 2026 I plan on touring the Pacific Northwest, performing at venues in key cities: Boise, Portland, Seattle, Vancouver, Olympia (and those off the beaten path) and recording with the artists I encounter along the way, which will culminate in a collaborative body of work consisting of audio and video digital media to be shown at a celebratory event upon returning home.

Provide a brief 2-3 sentence summary of the proposed event(s), including projected number of participants and event website, if applicable.

The performances will be an opportunity to showcase not only my art but to represent my hometown as the artistic hub that it is. To foster a creative collaborative spirit by reaching out to and recording with other regional artists while documenting the entire process, and finally, returning home for a celebratory reveal and performance. I will be posting all updates to my website, MrSletner.com

Are you charging a fee for tickets/reservations?

No

How much are you charging per ticket?

$ 000

Please describe the details included in your ticket price(s):

At this time I have no plans to charge, but if it is decided that we do, tickets will be extremely affordable or possibly food donation to benefit local food banks.

What do you want participants to take away from this event? How will you know if you were successful?

What I want participants to take away from this project is a sense of connection, discovery, and inspiration. For audiences, I hope the live performances and final showcase create moments of joy and reflection, where they feel part of something larger than a single artist or stage. I want them to see Spokane not just as a local arts community but as a central hub in a wider regional creative network. For the collaborating musicians, I want them to walk away with a renewed sense of pride in their work, knowing that their voices and talents are being elevated, shared, and celebrated both within their own communities and in Spokane. My broader goal is that participants take away a feeling of possibility: that music and art are not limited by geography or genre, but instead can serve as bridges that connect us. I want them to feel that Spokane is a city where collaborations can flourish, where audiences are open to new sounds, and where creative exchange is valued. If participants leave with a greater appreciation for the richness of Pacific Northwest artistry, and with a deeper sense of Spokane's role in it, then the project has achieved its purpose. I will measure success in several ways. On a practical level, I will track attendance numbers at performances and the final showcase, as well as online engagement with the documented journey (views, shares, comments, and streams of the collaborative album). These metrics will help demonstrate the reach of the project. On a community level, success will be measured by the feedback of participants, audience members who share their excitement, collaborators who express that they felt valued, and community members who feel enriched by the work. Most importantly, success will be measured by the lasting connections made. If this project leads to future collaborations, new friendships, and ongoing creative partnerships, then its impact will extend far beyond the initial 15 days. For me personally, I will know it was successful if I return to Spokane with not only recordings and performances but also stories, relationships, and experiences that continue to inspire new work and strengthen the cultural life of our community.

Please describe your venue, if applicable.

I am working to finalize all bookings as soon as possible and am looking at all ages venues as a priority.

OPTIONAL: Timeline and Impact

Instruction

Would you like to share timeline and impact information with the selection panel? Yes

Timeline

What is the project's timeline?

Please describe what you will accomplish during the projected grant year.

A video documented 15 day tour through the Pacific Northwest, beginning March 15th, and a collaborative album featuring regional local artists from the various tour stops to be showcased upon my return home to Spokane April 1st, 2026.

Impact and Results

Please describe the impact of your proposal.

The impact of this proposal extends far beyond a single tour or performance. At its core, this project is about connection, between artists, audiences, and communities across the Pacific Northwest, with Spokane serving as the hub where these threads come together. For Spokane, the impact is twofold. First, the city will gain new cultural experiences when I return with a showcase and album that highlight the talents of regional collaborators. This not only enriches our local arts scene but also positions Spokane as a gathering place for innovation and exchange. Second, the project strengthens Spokane's visibility on a regional level, ensuring that our community is seen as a source of creativity and collaboration throughout the Northwest. For audiences, the impact will be inspiration and discovery. Attendees of performances and the final showcase will be introduced to new voices, styles, and stories, broadening their cultural experience while also deepening their appreciation for the role Spokane plays in fostering such creativity. Online documentation will expand this reach, allowing those who cannot attend in person to still engage with the journey and celebrate its outcomes. For collaborating musicians, the impact will be direct recognition and inclusion. Their voices will be captured in recordings, celebrated on stage, and elevated through the release of a collaborative album. By providing stipends and support, this project ensures that artists are valued for their contributions, and it lays the groundwork for future partnerships that extend beyond the scope of this tour. The impact on my own practice as an artist will be equally significant. This project will deepen my collaborative approach, strengthen my skills as both performer and producer, and expand my ability to represent Spokane on a regional stage. The lessons learned, connections made, and recordings created will fuel my continued growth long after the project concludes. Ultimately, the greatest impact of this proposal will be the creation of a shared cultural moment, one where Spokane is not only the starting point but also the stage where the voices of the Pacific Northwest converge. By capturing these collaborations and presenting them to the community, this project leaves behind more than an album; it leaves a lasting record of what is possible when art is used to connect, inspire, and uplift.

Or provide a plan description:

The promotion and marketing strategy for this project is designed to maximize community engagement in Spokane while also reaching regional and online audiences throughout the Pacific Northwest. The plan combines grassroots outreach, digital media, and community partnerships to ensure the widest possible visibility and participation. Digital Promotion: I will use my existing online platforms including my official website (mrsletner.com), social media channels (Instagram, Facebook, YouTube, TikTok), and music platforms (Spotify, Bandcamp, SoundCloud) to document and share the journey in real time. Content will include behind-the-scenes videos, live-streamed performances, short-form reels highlighting collaborations, and promotional graphics leading up to the final showcase in Spokane. Hashtags and geo-targeting will help ensure posts reach audiences in each city along the tour route. Paid social ads will supplement organic content, targeting regional music fans and communities with interests in hip hop, indie, and collaborative art. Press & Media Outreach Press releases will be distributed to local and regional media outlets, including The Spokesman-Review, Inlander, and Pacific Northwest music blogs. I will also pitch feature stories and interviews to radio stations and podcasts that highlight independent musicians and cultural projects. These media efforts will both promote upcoming performances and raise awareness of the project's broader goals of regional collaboration and cultural exchange. Community & Venue Partnerships: At each tour stop, I will work with venues and local collaborators to promote events through their own networks. This includes posting on venue calendars, distributing posters and flyers, and engaging with community arts organizations. These partnerships extend the project's reach to audiences that may not already be familiar with my work, while also strengthening ties between Spokane and other regional creative communities. Spokane Showcase Promotion: Special emphasis will be placed on marketing the final Spokane showcase and album release event. In addition to digital promotion and media outreach, I will use traditional print flyers and posters distributed in Spokane's downtown arts district, coffee shops, record stores, and other cultural hubs. I will also explore partnerships with Spokane Arts, local music collectives, and community centers to ensure broad and inclusive visibility. Measuring Success: Promotion success will be evaluated through audience turnout at performances, online engagement analytics (likes, shares, comments, streams), and direct community feedback. Documenting the process not only serves as a marketing tool but also creates lasting content that can be shared with future partners, venues, and granting organizations. This multi-channel promotion plan ensures that the project reaches diverse audiences, engages community partners, and amplifies Spokane's identity as a hub for creativity and collaboration.

Artist Statement

Statement

Please provide your Artist
Statement.

My work is rooted in connection, transformation, and storytelling. Growing up in Spokane as the son of a professional musician, I experienced music not only as sound but as a way of life, long nights on the road with my father's band, the hum of speakers, the rhythms that made strangers feel like family. Those early experiences instilled in me the belief that art is not just entertainment but a bridge: a way to connect people across differences, geographies, and generations. I create because music has always been my compass, guiding me through loss, growth, and discovery. From my earliest tape-recorder experiments to releasing more than two dozen albums, my practice has evolved into a fusion of hip hop, electronic, funk, R&B, and experimental sounds that I often describe as a "cosmic symphony." This blending of styles reflects both my personal history and the cultural influences I carry, a mix of Spokane grit, Pacific Northwest independence, and the universal language of rhythm and storytelling. My overall vision is to use music as a vehicle for unity and transformation. I expect audiences to not only hear the beats and lyrics but to feel themselves reflected in the work. Whether they are nodding their heads at a live show, decoding lyrics at home, or experiencing one of my multimedia projects, I want listeners to walk away feeling uplifted, inspired, and reminded of the connections that bind us. My mantra, "leave them better than you found them," guides every performance, recording, and collaboration. In the broader context of contemporary art, my work sits at the crossroads of music, digital media, and performance art. I am deeply inspired by the ways technology has opened new possibilities for independent creators, from live-streaming my process to building interactive art experiences and collaborative albums. I see my practice as part of a larger movement where musicians and artists blur boundaries between disciplines, weaving sound with visual art, storytelling, and digital engagement. This current project, a Pacific Northwest tour and collaborative recording journey, fits squarely within the trajectory of my artistic development. It builds upon years of creating in Spokane and expands that work outward, situating our city as both anchor and amplifier in a regional conversation. By collaborating with artists in Portland, Seattle, Boise, and beyond, I am continuing a pattern of exchange that has always fueled my art: learning from others, creating together, and returning home with new stories and sounds. My sources and inspiration are both personal and communal. I am fueled by the legacy of my parents' music, the resilience of Spokane's arts community, the diversity of voices I encounter across the Northwest, and the endless possibilities that arise when people come together to create. My work is a mirror of all these influences, grounded in identity and geography, but always reaching toward the universal.
